About

Welcome to SilentMajoritySpeaksUp.com.

SilentMajoritySpeaksUp.com provides a venue for people who feel they are the "silent majority" to speak up and express their opinions in an environment of respect and tolerance. Too often people who are the silent majority fear expressing their opinions or taking a public stand because of the badgering they've experienced personally or seen others endure.

Shouting, having signs thrust in your face, being called foul names, having your opinion disregarded or having your business boycotted are just a few of the tactics that force people to be silent. Don't think for a moment that the very vocal minority don't know how to quiet the silent majority. It is a conscious, planned effort.

The purpose of this site is to provide members of the "silent majority" a means to speak up without fear of reprisals, retribution or disrespect.

To join, click Membership Sign-up at the top of the page.

Time to Take Action

I just cannot stay quiet any longer. The recent controversy in Madison, Wisconsin over the State budget and collective bargaining has prodded me to take action. Living within 20 minutes of the Capitol, I have been exposed to the liberal environment of Madison for the last 25 years. Historically, liberals and conservatives have found a way to co-exist and to get legislative work done in a civil manner even though they did not agree. That however changed in March when 14 Democratic Senators left the State and hid out in Illinois to prevent a vote on the Governor's budget

Taking Action and Developing New Habits

Posted on April 12, 2011 by Judy Whalen

Looking at my blog posts, it occurred to me how difficult it is to take action and develop new habits. As I work at moving my offline consulting business to an online model, I've been on a massive learning curve. Learning new software. Learning new marketing techniques. Learning the language of the online world. Learning (or at least trying to learn) social media. Learning to develop new habits to keep my websites current.

Adapt and Change Habits

One of the hardest things to learn is to adapt the way I structure my time and change my habits. After 18 years in the offline consulting world and being very conscious of time efficiency, parts of my business are comfortable... you know, like "the old shoe." Moving into the online arena has jolted me out of my comfort zone. The "new zone" has been terribly uncomfortable at times. But it has also been exhilarating, even though it is exhausting. It's been exciting yet daunting. Things that were easy and comfortable in the offline world are new and different and more difficult (at the moment) in the online world. Habits that served me well for 18 years in the offline world need to be modified to benefit me in the online world. One habit I am trying to develop is to write posts regularly for this blog. But as you can see, many days slipped away before I got back to writing. It's not because I don't have topics to write about, it is because I have not yet developed the system

<?php
include("lib/facebook.php");

$APPLICATION_ID = "xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx";
$APPLICATION_SECRET = "yyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyy";

$facebook = new Facebook(array(
    'appId' => $APPLICATION_ID,
    'secret' => $APPLICATION_SECRET,
    'cookie' => true
));

$fbid="xxxxxxxxxx";

$fql = "SELECT pid FROM photo WHERE object_id=".$fbid;

$params = array(
    'method' => 'fql.query',
    'query' => $fql,

The right sidebar contains several widgets: a 'T = W / P' widget showing the time '09:26 AM 13' and a motivational quote; a 'Motivational Stream' widget with a quote about remembering things in life; a 'Search engine' widget with a search box and a 'Search' button; and a 'Keywords – Tags' widget listing various technical terms like 'Amazon-EC2', 'aws', 'CakePHP', 'Configure Amazon EC2', 'Convert PDF into HTML', 'web publishing', 'cronjobs', 'dimdim', 'EC2', 'facebook', 'facebook application', 'facebook developer', 'fbapps', 'ffmpeg', 'git', and 'happy'.
